Sebacic Acid CAS 111-20-6 Analytical Reagent Slightly Soluble In Water

Sebacic acid is a chemical compound with the molecular formula C10H18O4. It is a dicarboxylic acid that consists of a tencarbon chain (decanedioic acid) with two carboxyl groups (-COOH) attached to it at each end. Sebacic acid is a white crystalline solid that is odorless and soluble in water. It is derived from castor oil through a process called hydrolysis. It is primarily used in the production of polymers, such as nylon, polyester, and polyurethane. One of the major applications of sebacic acid is as a building block in the synthesis of nylon-6,10. When combined with hexamethylenediamine, sebacic acid forms a polymer known as nylon-6,10, which possesses excellent tensile strength, chemical resistance, and heat resistance. Nylon-6,10 finds applications in various industries, including textiles, automotive components, and electrical insulation.
